

Sentiment, Signals and Surveillance

Natural Language Processing for Financial Markets

May 19, 2020

Executive Summary:

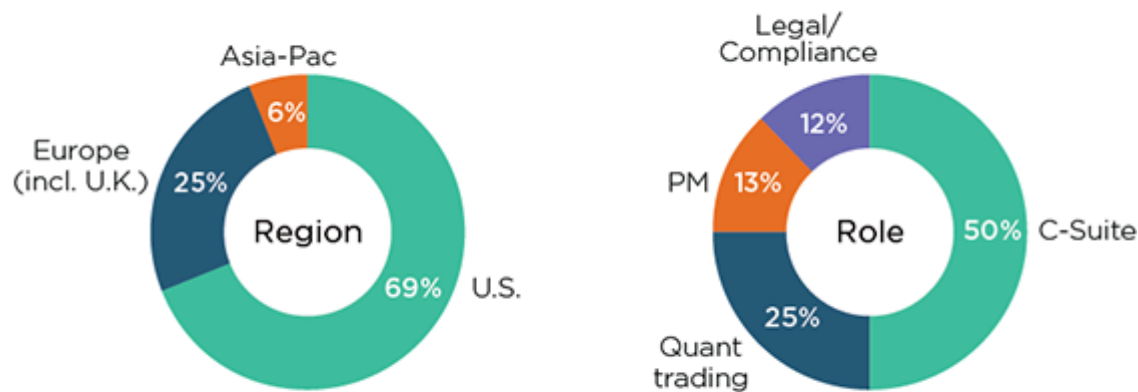

Capital markets have become flooded with a deep pool of audio and written content that can provide unique insights for investors. This "unstructured" data can be absorbed by traders, but to truly unlock the full value of this ocean of data, trading and investment firms need to investigate the potential arising from natural language processing (NLP).

Firms seeking to utilize NLP will need to have an understanding of its value, the challenges associated with an NLP implementation, and the current and potential future state of the technology. Regardless of whether NLP is being used to analyze news sentiment, derive trading signals or enhance surveillance capabilities, understanding the basis for the technology is an important step toward unlocking its potential. Our research aims to address these important aspects for firms seeking to initiate or expand their use of NLP.

Methodology:

From January–April 2020, senior analysts at Greenwich Associates conducted in-depth interviews with 16 quantitative-focused investors in the United States, Europe and Asia-Pacific. Respondents were asked a series of questions investigating their usage of NLP, including vendors used, the evaluation process of new datasets, as well as factors weighed in the decision to buy vs. build NLP solutions regarding sentiment data.

The data contained in the Document is based upon a particular bank's scope, which reflects a bank's data submission, business structure, and sales revenue Reporting methodology. As a result, any data contained in the Document may not be directly comparable to data presented to another bank. For franchise benchmarking, Crisil Coalition Greenwich has implemented equal ranking logic on aggregate results i.e., when sales revenues are within 5% of at least one competitor ahead, a tie is shown and designated by = (where actual ranks are shown). Entity level data has no equal ranking logic implemented and therefore, on occasion, the differences between rank bands can be very close mathematically.

The data in this Document may reflect the views reported to Crisil Coalition Greenwich by the research participants. Interviewees may be asked about their use of and demand for financial products and services and about investment practices in relevant financial markets. Crisil Coalition Greenwich compiles the data received, conducts statistical analysis and reviews for presentation purposes to produce the final results.
