

The Next Generation of Bank Trading and Risk Technology

May 11, 2021

Executive Summary:

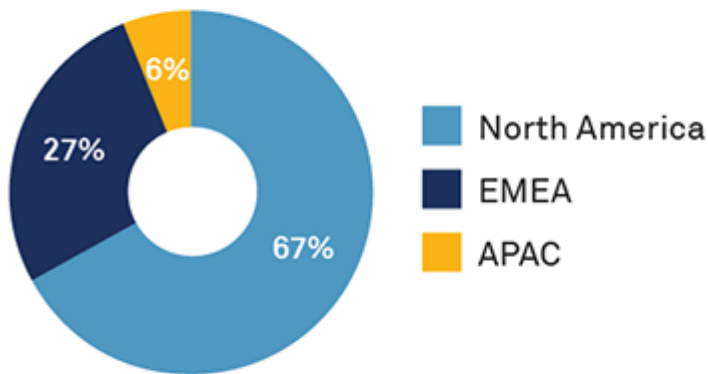

The clear focus on compliance and operational efficiency is putting pressure on banks to be more agile and to rely more on third-party software and services providers. At the same time, trading and risk platforms supporting banks are in a race to expand functionality and improve workflow or they risk being a victim of consolidation by banks.

Methodology:

Between October and December of 2020, Greenwich Associates (now Coalition Greenwich) conducted interviews with 30 senior bank executives across the trading and risk function at Tier I/II/III banks in North America, Europe and Asia. Specific roles included Bank CTOs/COOs/CDOs, Heads of Risk Technology, and Heads of Trading (across multiple asset classes and products). Our conversations focused on business priorities, technology strategies, IT spending trends, the choice of technology platforms for trading and risk management, and the adoption of cloud and emerging technologies.

The data contained in the Document is based upon a particular bank's scope, which reflects a bank's data submission, business structure, and sales revenue Reporting methodology. As a result, any data contained in the Document may not be directly comparable to data presented to another bank. For franchise benchmarking, Crisil Coalition Greenwich has implemented equal ranking logic on aggregate results i.e., when sales revenues are within 5% of at least one competitor ahead, a tie is shown and designated by = (where actual ranks are shown). Entity level data has no equal ranking logic implemented and therefore, on occasion, the differences between rank bands can be very close mathematically.

The data in this Document may reflect the views reported to Crisil Coalition Greenwich by the research participants. Interviewees may be asked about their use of and demand for financial products and services and about investment practices in relevant financial markets.
