

Corporate FX Trading—The Value of Relationships and Execution Quality

August 20, 2024

Executive Summary:

An effective corporate foreign exchange desk can help a company's liquidity management, currency hedging and support other key objectives of a treasurer. Yet many corporates think of FX execution with their bank counterparties not as a distinct activity that stands on its own, but as one component of a broader set of services. Because the responsibilities of a corporate FX and treasury desk are so vast, how they assess their FX counterparties differs from asset managers and asset owners, for example. Regardless of type of firm, however, FX desks need to focus on execution quality.

According to Coalition Greenwich research, 50% of corporate volume allocation on average is driven by FX service. Though this is the primary influence, it is not the only one. The other drivers of FX flow are services such as lending and cash management relations that also play an important role in the allocation of volume.

The data contained in the Document is based upon a particular bank's scope, which reflects a bank's data submission, business structure, and sales revenue Reporting methodology. As a result, any data contained in the Document may not be directly comparable to data presented to another bank. For franchise benchmarking, Crisil Coalition Greenwich has implemented equal ranking logic on aggregate results i.e., when sales revenues are within 5% of at least one competitor ahead, a tie is shown and designated by = (where actual ranks are shown). Entity level data has no equal ranking logic implemented and therefore, on occasion, the differences between rank bands can be very close mathematically.

The data in this Document may reflect the views reported to Crisil Coalition Greenwich by the research participants. Interviewees may be asked about their use of and demand for financial products and services and about investment practices in relevant financial markets. Crisil Coalition Greenwich compiles the data received, conducts statistical analysis and reviews for presentation purposes to produce the final results.
