

The US Invasion of European Fixed Income

March 5, 2014

Capital is expensive and getting more expensive. But the problem is proving a much harder one to manage in Europe, with European banks continuing to deleverage and already complying with the principles of Basel III while US banks have their capital houses (relatively) in order.

The impact of this dichotomy is broad, but one impact already playing out is the growth of US banks in the European Fixed Income market. Recently published Greenwich research based on roughly 1200 European buy side interviews found that every US bank in the top 15 fixed income dealer list gained share in 2013, while every European bank's market share was either flat or down. The primary reason uncovered was the cost of and ability to commit capital.

European investors, seeing that the world has changed, are looking to new sources of liquidity as well. New liquidity providers, more electronic trading and new smart matching tools all are seeing increased adoption and success. The report, available to our Market Structure and Technology customers, examines how individual dealers are fairing, detailed trends in electronic trading adoption and suggested new tools for finding liquidity in the bond market.

The data contained in the Document is based upon a particular bank's scope, which reflects a bank's data submission, business structure, and sales revenue Reporting methodology. As a result, any data contained in the Document may not be directly comparable to data presented to another bank. For franchise benchmarking, Crisil Coalition Greenwich has implemented equal ranking logic on aggregate results i.e., when sales revenues are within 5% of at least one competitor ahead, a tie is shown and designated by = (where actual ranks are shown). Entity level data has no equal ranking logic implemented and therefore, on occasion, the differences between rank bands can be very close mathematically.

The data in this Document may reflect the views reported to Crisil Coalition Greenwich by the research participants. Interviewees may be asked about their use of and demand for financial products and services and about investment practices in relevant financial markets. Crisil Coalition Greenwich compiles the data received, conducts statistical analysis and reviews for presentation purposes to produce the final results.
