

In Search of New Corporate Bond Liquidity

March 29, 2016

Executive Summary:

The liquidity profile of the corporate bond market has undergone significant change. Institutional investors broadly agree that the amount of principal-sourced dealer liquidity has declined in the past year.

Among participants in Greenwich Associates 2015 Corporate Bond Liquidity Study, most believe this “new normal” is a risk to their portfolio, and over half anticipate further declines in liquidity provided by dealers.

But new alternatives exist to lubricate the market and ensure that credit flows smoothly. While the market has likely changed for good, a few paths forward are starting to emerge.

Methodology:

Between December 2015 and February 2016, Greenwich Associates interviewed 58 institutional corporate bond investors located in the U.S. and Europe. Questions focused on corporate bond liquidity, the market’s evolution and new technology solutions.

The data reported in this document reflect solely the views reported to Greenwich Associates by the research participants. Interviewees may be asked about their use of and demand for financial products and services and about investment practices in relevant financial markets. Greenwich Associates compiles the data received, conducts statistical analysis and reviews for presentation purposes in order to produce the final results. Unless otherwise indicated, any opinions or market observations made are strictly our own.
