

Digital Capabilities Rapidly Emerging As A Key Driver of Commercial Bank Selection

December 22, 2017

Greenwich Associates latest research shows the majority of wholesale executives indicated that a bank's digital capabilities are critical in determining how they select a provider.

As the marketplace evolves and service perceptions are more closely tied to technology, those that are positioned to innovate and invest will benefit. However, an increasingly competitive and capable set of third-party providers are also making solutions viable for banks without sufficient scale or internal development expertise.

DIGITAL CAPABILITIES AS A DRIVER IN BANK SELECTION

A majority of companies credit digital channels with making it easier to do business with their bank, and approximately one-third of small businesses and one-half of mid-sized companies would even be open to a self-service banking model that carried lower fees.

This reality presents an interesting opportunity for banks today to drive efficiency and focus banker resources on business development activities.

Market leaders will be recognized as part of the Greenwich Associates expanded digital banking awards to be announced in the first quarter of 2018.
